LAND for TOMORROW

Land for Tomorrow is a statewide coalition of community leaders, organizations and local governments with a common goal: increasing land and water conservation. North Carolina is fortunate to have incredible natural resources. Preserving those resources is important to our future.

We are also fortunate to have a Legislature that has strongly supported natural lands preservation by providing significant state funding to four proven conservation trust funds. This smart legislative leadership has resulted in the conservation of hundreds of thousands of acres of family farms, forests, stream banks, game lands, parks, greenways and trails.

This annual “Green Book” report gives you an idea of what has been accomplished through grants from the state’s four conservation trust funds – the Natural Heritage Trust Fund, the Parks and Recreation Trust Fund, the Clean Water Management Trust Fund, and the Agricultural Development and Farmland Preservation Trust Fund.

Despite these remarkable accomplishments, there is still much to be done. North Carolina continues to lose valuable land at an alarming rate. Since the last session of the General Assembly adjourned, 50,000 acres of farms, forests and natural areas have disappeared – converted into other uses. Our continued commitment to conservation will ensure that our water is clean, our farms flourish, our forests grow and our people have places to walk, fish, hunt and swim.

CONSERVATION FUNDING: Good for the Economy, Good for Public Health

In bad economic times, conservation funding may be viewed as discretionary – something that can be put off until the economy improves. But conservation can't be delayed. It is vital to the economy and public health.

In many North Carolina communities, conservation is the only economic driver. Take Lake Lure. Mayor Jim Proctor lives in an old house that once was a stagecoach stop. As travel modernized and sped up, Lake Lure's importance as a rest for weary travelers ended. "The only thing that we have to offer is scenic beauty," Proctor explains. "Our economy is totally centered on scenic beauty. If that goes away, our economy goes away with it."

Lake Lure lies in Hickory Nut Gorge, which is filled with towering cliffs and waterfalls. The gorge is home to 37 rare plant species and is an important habitat for table mountain pine, which is only found in the Southern Appalachians. Despite its amazing natural history, pristine waters and incredible views, very little of the area was permanently preserved until just a few years ago. That changed in 2005, when the state created Chimney Rock State Park. Since that time, the state's conservation funds have purchased thousands of acres in the gorge – preserving the scenery, protecting threatened species, ensuring clean water, and creating a destination for travelers who pour money into the local economy. "Buying and protecting our view is protecting our economy," explains Proctor.

Carol Price, who directs McDowell County's Tourism Development Authority, agrees. McDowell County once had a thriving economy built around furniture and textile manufacturing, but those jobs are gone and unlikely to return. Now, McDowell County's economy largely hinges on tourism and retirees. "In our area, land conservation is critical," explains Price. "If you come to McDowell County, you are going to be enjoying the outdoors."

"The only thing that we have to offer is scenic beauty," Proctor explains. "OUR ECONOMY IS TOTALLY CENTERED ON SCENIC BEAUTY. If that goes away, our economy goes away with it."

Many counties' land use plans clearly reflect the need to ensure that natural resources are conserved as a part of long-term planning. For instance, Gates County's recent land use implementation status report targets its major natural resource, the Chowan River:

"Preserve, protect and enhance the Chowan River shoreline and attendant wetlands and shores and ensure future generations are able to enjoy its beauty and bounty and can continue to use it for passive and active recreation and leisure activities."

The basis for the majority of North Carolina's conservation land purchases is clean water. Protecting watersheds makes good economic sense. An American Water Works Association study says that for every 10 percent increase in forest cover, drinking water treatment and chemical costs decrease approximately 20 percent. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency estimates that it is anywhere from 20 to 400 times more expensive to treat contaminated water than to prevent that contamination through watershed protection.

Wetlands are also protected through conservation. In addition to providing water quality protection, protecting coastal wetlands makes sound economic and public safety sense. Hurricane Katrina's devastation on the Gulf Coast partially resulted from coastal wetlands destruction. Without the wetlands to buffer and slow down the storm surge, the hurricane swept directly into coastal communities. A 2008 study of North Carolina coastal wetlands estimates that they provide $620 million in storm protection services each year.

North Carolina's $70 billion per year agricultural economy is also threatened by land loss. Have you ever noticed the number of subdivisions in North Carolina with the word "farm" in their name? Have you noticed the number of roads that have "farm" in their name with no farm nearby? That's because much productive farm land has been gobbled up by development. North Carolina's family farms are disappearing at an alarming rate. According to the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, between the years 2003 and 2006, North Carolina lost 5,500 farms amounting to 300,000 acres of farmland. That's farmland equivalent to the size of Cleveland County, all lost in just four years. Preserving working family farms is critical to the agricultural economy, which accounts for 73,000 jobs in the state. Even in rapidly urbanizing areas like the Triangle, farms still coexist with spreading suburbs and business developments. Chatham County grew almost 22 percent from 2000 to 2006, compared to a statewide growth rate of 10 percent. The landscape has changed to accommodate that growth.

Jeff Masten, Director of Conservation Strategies for the Triangle Land Conservancy, works to preserve Chatham County farmland. "In a county like Chatham, which is rural but urbanizing, rural roots have an economic equation that fits in with the local economy," he explains. "Retaining these farms hits the bottom line of the community."

Land conservation also plays a crucial role in another major aspect of North Carolina's economy – the military. Camp Lejeune lies in an area that is rapidly developing. That development threatened the Marines' ability to conduct training in a time of war. Enter the Onslow Bight Conservation Forum, which was formed in 2002 by the Marine Corps and The Nature Conservancy. The Forum's purpose is twofold: It addresses the issue of development encroaching on the base, and it works to conserve the natural heritage of the area. The state's conservation funds have pumped more than $60 million into conservation in the area, leveraging $15 million in federal funding.

Bill Rogers, head of Camp Lejeune's environmental conservation branch, says the dollars have been well spent. "To continue our mission, we need to look outside the fence at land use to ensure that those land uses are compatible with the base's needs," he explains. THE OTHER SIDE OF THE EQUATION IS RARE AND ENDANGERED SPECIES. We're very interested in making sure that military installations don't become an island – the last home for rare species."

Onslow Bight purchases have provided large swaths of land that allow black bear to roam. They have also provided home for the federally endangered red cockaded woodpecker. "We've made good progress," Rogers said. "This benefits the military, fish, wildlife and the state."

Onslow Bight pine savanna ©Mark Daniels/TNC

Since 2003, the Clean Water Management Trust Fund has protected land around other North Carolina military installations, including Camp McCall, Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, Cherry Point Marine Corps Air Station, and the Air Force's Dare County Bombing Range.

North Carolina has only recently begun to document the economic impact of its natural resources. Last year, researchers at N.C. State University studied the economic contribution of state parks. They looked at out-of-county visitors to 14 of the state's 33 parks and found that those parks accounted for at least a $195 million shot to the economy. A conservative extrapolation of that data to the state's entire park system results in an annual economic contribution of more than $400 million.

One of the study's authors, Dr. Candace Good, says she thinks the state and others haven't done enough to show the tie between conservation and economic benefits. “I don’t think there has been enough emphasis on the other benefits that come from conserving property,” she says. “You need to open up people’s eyes that there are other benefits to having that land.”

Protecting property provides another public health benefit as well. We’re in the midst of an obesity epidemic, which is falling particularly hard on children. North Carolina ranks fifth in the nation in the number of obese children. We have the 10th highest rate of diabetes in the country. Diabetes and other diseases can be prevented or controlled through physical activity. That’s why it is important to build trails and greenways and buy parkland.

Mary Beth Powell, who heads UNC-Chapel Hill’s Active Living by Design Program says buying land to create recreational opportunities improves public health. “It has been shown that providing an opportunity for physical activity is a really key factor in reducing obesity rates and preventing obesity,” she explains. “Merely having walking trails and natural areas – their mere presence dramatically affects a person’s health.”

Sig Hutchinson, who has led several successful efforts to conserve greenways in Wake County, agrees. “You cannot continue to tell your patients that they need to get more exercise, knowing that there is no way they can currently get exercise,” he explains. Hutchinson, who lives on a greenway, sees firsthand that lots of people will use them if they are created, and notes: “I never see anyone on a greenway in a bad mood.”

Conserved areas bring people together. “They build community; they allow people to interact with other people that they normally wouldn’t interact with,” Hutchinson says. “So many times we’re interacting with neighbors through the windshields of our cars – fighting for every square foot of asphalt. On a greenway you see your neighbors – before long that turns into a smile and a name.”

North Carolina's Conservation Trust Funds

North Carolina has four publicly funded conservation trust funds. Each funds different needs.

The Natural Heritage Trust Fund,

created in 1987, provides funding for the acquisition and protection of important natural and cultural areas. Acquisitions include land that is home to rare plant and animal species and important wildlife habitats. It also covers the acquisition of sites that are significant to North Carolina's cultural history. To date, it has funded more than $300 million in projects across the state.

The Parks and Recreation Trust

Fund was created in 1994. It funds improvements in the state's park system, dollar-for-dollar matching grants to local government for parks, and grants to local government to improve public beach and estuarine access. It is the main source of funding for most state park improvements or acquisition of land to create new parks or expand existing ones. To date, it has funded more than $446 million in projects across the state.

The Clean Water Management Trust

Fund was created in 1996, in the wake of several high profile water pollution problems. It makes grants to local governments, state agencies and conservation nonprofits to help finance projects that address water pollution. It covers land acquisitions that protect watersheds. It also funds other solutions to pollution, such as wastewater treatment or stormwater upgrades. To date, it has funded more than $950 million in projects across the state.

www.cwmtf.net

The Agricultural Development and Farmland Preservation Trust Fund

was created in 2005. Grants secure agricultural conservation easements on lands used for production of food, fiber and other agricultural products, and support public and private enterprise programs that promote profitable and sustainable agricultural, horticultural, and forestland activities. To date, it has funded $7.6 million in projects across the state. The ADFPT grew out of an earlier program, the Farmland Preservation Trust Fund. Note: Data in the county section of this document under ADFPT includes earlier projects funded by the Farmland Preservation Trust Fund.

2008 Success Stories

In 2008, the state's conservation trust funds awarded 330 grants for a total of $354.1 million. Many worthy projects went unfunded as illustrated by this graph.

Every year, North Carolina's conservation funds go to projects across the state. Most of the conservation purchases share one trait – they protect water quality. Many boost the economy by providing new and improved recreational opportunities, protecting scenery and protecting traditional industries such as farming and forestry. Many also have an added public health benefit. These are just a few of 2008's success stories.

Conservation Funds Help Create 64,000 Acres of New Game Land, Boosting Hook and Bullet Economy

Bertie, Brunswick, Columbus, Franklin, Gates, Halifax, Hertford, Martin, Nash, Northhampton, Washington and Warren counties

2008 saw the closure on the largest single conservation land deal in the state's history, resulting in more than 64,000 acres of new state game land and large-scale protection of water quality in four basins across the state. This is significant in a state that receives more than $4 billion annually as the result of hunting, fishing and other wildlife-related activities – the hook and bullet economy.

The new game lands were once owned by International Paper, which sold the property in 2006 to The Nature Conservancy. Most of the IP land was transferred to the Wildlife Resources Commission, but small portions went to the state Division of Parks and Recreation for Medoc Mountain State Park and the Division of Cultural Resources to protect Civil War breastworks on the Roanoke River. The state's conservation trust funds spent a combined $54.7 million to preserve the property.

In October 2008, the last of the property – more than 15,000 acres on the Chowan River – was transferred to

Chowan Swamp Game Lands ©Debbie Crane/TNC

WRC, expanding the Chowan Swamp Game Land to 27,516 acres. Game lands along the Roanoke, Upper Tar and Juniper Creek, which is a tributary to the Waccamaw River, also received significant boosts as a result of the IP deal. The new game lands are now open for business, providing hunters and anglers with new territory and opening up the areas for other nature lovers to enjoy. In addition to supporting wildlife and recreation, the new game lands play a significant role in protecting water quality. For instance, the Waccamaw River has four tributaries, and purchasing the Juniper Creek Game Land protected one tributary in its entirety.

The new game lands are important to the economy. A 2006 study by Southwick Associates found 3.4 million people participated in fish and/or wildlife-related recreation in North Carolina. They spent $2.62 billion in retail sales, creating $1.26 billion in wages and supporting 45,224 jobs. The total hook and bullet economic impact was estimated at $4.3 billion.

Creating the State's Newest Park

Avery, Watauga, Caldwell counties

For years, Grandfather Mountain, with its animal habitats and mile-high swinging bridge, has attracted tourists to northwestern North Carolina. It is expected those numbers will grow now that Grandfather Mountain is to become North Carolina's 34th park, opening up backcountry parts of the mountain that previously had no public access.

The state announced plans to purchase 2,601 acres of undeveloped property on the mountain in September for $12 million from the Parks and Recreation and Natural Heritage trust funds.

This backcountry section of Grandfather Mountain sprawls across Avery, Watauga and Caldwell counties and includes a series of trails. The area is an ecological treasure trove covering the headwaters of the Linville and Watauga rivers and supporting 16 different ecosystems. More than 70 rare species have been identified on the land; 32 are listed as endangered.

Local tourism officials say the park is just the beginning of something bigger. They are lobbying the federal government to create the Grandfather National Scenic Area, which would apply scenic protections to the public lands in the area – many of which have been purchased and protected over the years thanks to the state's conservation funds. The scenic area would cover more than 25,000 acres of public land. Researchers at

Pond Mountain © Lisa Schell

Colorado State University say that designation would be a big economic boost for Avery, Caldwell and Watauga counties. They estimate it would attract an additional 1.5 million visitors annually, create 724 new jobs and generate an additional $38.4 million a year.

Pond Mountain – Partnering for Protection

Ashe County

No one goes it alone when it comes to land conservation. Almost every preservation deal is a result of partnership. That's especially true of the purchase of Pond Mountain, 1,765 acres in the northwest corner of Ashe County. The Blue Ridge Rural Land Trust purchased the property, using $15.2 million in grants from the Clean Water Management and Natural Heritage trust funds and $1.3 million from a private donor. Much of the property will be transferred to the Wildlife Resources Commission for use as game land.

The Pond Mountain tract includes nearly 18 miles of high-quality mountain streams. The tract includes the headwaters of the Big Laurel and Big Horse Creeks, which both flow into the New River's North Fork, providing significant protection for the New River.

At 5,000 feet, Pond Mountain offers a 360-degree view across three states. The North Carolina view includes Mount Jefferson, Three Top Mountain, Elk Knob and Grandfather Mountain. Looking toward Virginia, you'll see the Jefferson National Forest, Grayson Highlands and Mount Rogers, which is that state's highest peak. To the west, there's Cherokee National Forest in Tennessee. The area is home to a wide variety of animal species, including white-tailed deer, black bear, ruffed grouse and wild turkey. Preserving Pond Mountain helps to give large game like bear a corridor to travel from one protected area to another, increasing the area's value as game land.

Farmland Preservation

Chestnut Hill Farm-Chatham County

For four generations, the Andrew family has farmed at Chestnut Hill in northwest Chatham County. Today, Lin Andrew and his family run a thriving farm with a commercial cow herd, egg-laying hens and a goat herd. The Andrews recently expanded their operations to include a line of grass-fed beef to address the desire for locally grown food in the Triangle.

The family has a history of strong environmental stewardship. The family has partnered with the Chatham Soil and Water District on a number of conservation measures. They also compost their poultry litter. They received the 2003 Family Farm Excellence Award from the US Poultry and Egg Association and were named the Piedmont Conservation Farm Family of the Year by the NC Soil and Water Conservation District.

This is one farm that won't be turned into a bedroom community for the Triangle. Working with the Triangle Land Conservancy, the Andrews received a $664,300 ADFPT grant, putting the majority (170 acres) of the farm into a working farm conservation easement.

Knox Farm

Rowan County

There have been Knoxes farming property along Third Creek in Western Rowan County since before the American Revolution. The first Knox deed on the property dates to 1758. Today the farm is run by Clark and Ben Knox, who plant corn, soybeans and clover. Thanks to a conservation easement, the farm will continue to produce crops for generations to come. That's important in Rowan County where agriculture accounts for $43.5 million to the local economy.

The Knox family donated a 195-acre conservation easement to the LandTrust for Central North Carolina. A $23,650 ADFPT grant covered transaction costs.

Francis Farm

Halifax County

Tony Francis' grandparents started their farm in the 1920s. Over the years, the farm has produced tobacco, peanuts, corn, cotton, timber and livestock.

Tony wants to pass the farm on to future Francis generations. He also wants to produce organic vegetables. Putting most of the farm under conservation easement helps him achieve both of those goals as well as improve the overall operation of the farm.

Francis partnered with the Fishing Creek Soil and Water Conservation District to put 370 acres of the farm into a conservation easement, which was funded by a $442,000 ADFPT grant.

Building Trails Across the State: Good for People; Good for the Economy

Gaston, Johnston, Mecklenburg, Mitchell and Wake Counties

The Clean Water Management Trust Fund funded components of three of the state's major trail systems – the Mountains to Sea Trail, the Overmountain Victory Trail and the proposed Carolina Thread Trail.

Nearly $9 million protected 866 acres and added three miles to the existing Mountains to Sea and Overmountain Victory trails. The two projects will protect water quality in the Neuse River Basin in the Coastal Plain and the French Broad River Basin in the mountains, and extend recreational opportunities for both residents and visitors to the state.

Another $3 million grant will help create the Carolina Thread Trail, an innovative open space project that will link the southern Piedmont's most ecologically significant natural areas. The Carolina Thread Trail will create a network of greenways, open space and trails across the span of 500 miles, stretching through 15 counties in North Carolina and South Carolina near Charlotte. The trail will combine both existing conservation lands with efforts to preserve new properties in order to protect water resources and wildlife habitat from development.

The $3 million CWMTF grant will purchase land in Mecklenburg and Gaston counties that will protect water quality in the Catawba River Basin. The entire trail project has the potential to protect a minimum of 4,800 acres along rivers, creeks and streams in the Catawba, Broad and Yadkin-Pee Dee river basins.

Development of these three trail projects is not only essential to the protection of water quality across the state, but illustrates the important role of conservation funding in protecting North Carolina's economy. All three trails will increase recreational opportunities in their respective communities and will maintain and enhance the quality of life component that is critical for economic development.

A 1998 NC State University study of trail and greenway use in the state found that citizens supported trail and greenway development, and that the trails and greenways contributed substantially to the state's economy. Seventy-five percent of those surveyed felt trail availability was important. Organizers of the Carolina Thread Trail project that it will generate $250 million in one-time economic impacts over a 15-year period, creating nearly 2,800 jobs. In addition to the one-time economic impact, the fully completed trail will generate $40M-$80M annually in those counties from recreational spending.
